About ForexLicenseWiki

From ForexLicenseWiki, the free encyclopedia of forex licenses · Last updated 28 November 2026

ForexLicenseWiki (forexlicensewiki.com) is a free, independent encyclopedia of forex and CFD broker licenses. For each jurisdiction it explains what the regulator requires (capital, fees, substance, timelines) and what the license does, and does not, protect for traders.

It is written for two kinds of reader: founders and compliance teams comparing where to apply, and traders checking what a broker's license is worth. Both deserve the same facts, so we present one set.

ForexLicenseWiki is a sister site of CompanyFormationWiki and shares its editorial standards.

How the site is funded

The operator offers paid private consultations, which are clearly separated from the articles (see the editorial policy). The site does not accept payment from brokers or regulators, does not publish broker rankings and does not carry broker advertising on license pages.

Frequently asked questions

Is ForexLicenseWiki a regulator or a licensing agent?
No. It is an information service. Licenses are granted only by the regulators, and the only authoritative record of who holds one is the regulator's own public register.

Do you recommend brokers?
No. We explain licenses and protections; we do not rank, review or recommend brokers.

How current is the information?
Every guide shows a last-updated date and an “as of” date for its figures, and lists its sources.
